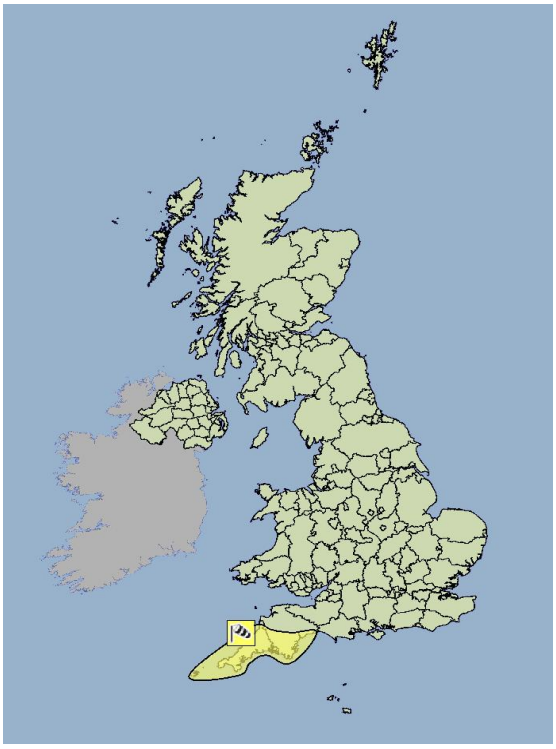
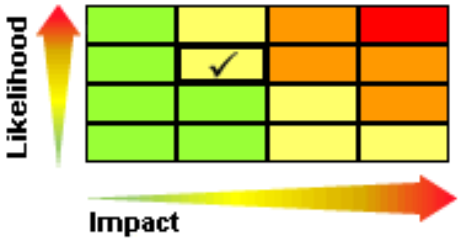
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure developing over the Southwest Approaches Saturday evening overnight into Sunday brings strengthening southeasterly winds into Devon and, more especially, Cornwall from early Sunday onwards into Sunday afternoon before winds slowly back easterly and gradually start to ease a little later on Sunday afternoon and more especially on Sunday evening.

These strong winds will be accompanied by outbreaks of rain, initially mainly over western Cornwall where some locally heavier bursts of rain are possible before the focus of the heaviest and most persistent rain shifts to Bodmin Moor and Dartmoor during Sunday afternoon and evening.

The main impacts of this spell of windy weather are expected to be over south-facing coastal areas in Cornwall where the combination of gales, high spring tides and large waves may lead to some local flooding of coastal roads and promenades and parts of some communities, most likely in coastal harbour and estuaries and low-lying areas.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 05:00 on Sun, 10th Apr 2016 until 12:00 on Sun, 10th Apr 2016

Strong winds will affect the far southwest of England on Sunday bringing gusts up to 45-50 mph quite widely inland and locally up to 55-60 mph on exposed coastlines and hills.

The public should be aware that some branches or trees could be brought down causing some travel disruption and debris may also be blown around. The public should also be
